TREMENDOUS RIOT .- Yesterday afternoon our usu TREMENDOUS RIOT.—Yesterday afternoon our usually peaceful city was the scene of a most terrible affray. One of the editors of this paper being sick at his house in Purchase street, was a personal witness of the commencement of the affray, but it is useless to enlarge upon the particulars. Suffice it that the first quarrel began between some Irish, who were following a hearse, in Sea street, and the members of an engine company. We will add, that the stories that were current with some, that the hearse was knocked over, the coffin broken, and the corpse tumbled from it, are totally false.

But a fierce battle soon raged. Both enginemen and Irish were soon reinforced, and clubs were used with Irish were soon reinforced, and clubs were used with dreadful effect. The Irish were driven to Broad street, and there, for an hour and a half, the contest was continued, chiefly with stones, the victory alternately between the parties. Many were constantly wounded, and were carried off; but there seemed no systematic effort to stop the furious battle. In the meanmatic effort to stop the furious battle. In the meantime, the citizens gathered in vast multitudes, and Broad street and its neighborhood was a sea of heads.

From before 4 to about one quarter after 5, there was not a rioter captured, but the deadly work was proceeding without interruption. After that time, the enginemen gained the advantage—and, one by one, the frishmen were seized, bloody and gasping, and takes to jail. At length, victory declared in favor of the ensinemen, and the Irish retreated towards the wharves ginemen, and the Irish retreated towards the wharves and into the houses. An onset was now made upon the houses, and they were soon filled with men, who turned them inside out, throwing beds and furniture

Many of the military put on their uniforms, and rushed to Fancuil Hall, early in the affray, and their ranks rapidly filled. Unfortunately such is the state of our law, that they could not move without the transmission of order from the Major General, and this caused long delay. At half past five they loaded with ball cartridges, and at a quarter of six a column marched, consisting of the company of cavalry called the Lancers, and four companies of infantry. The column marched without interruption to the scene of action, cheered by the citizens, and halted, but found no necessity to use their arms, as only one party were then upon the field.

It is our painful duty to state that the conviction is forced upon us, that several have been killed The forced upon us, that several have been killed The wounded were numerous, some very dangerously so.

We will my no more. To attempt to investigate causes would be useless. It is the most terrible and general riot which has occurred in our city for years—if, indeed, we have ever had so terrible a cembat.

Justice will sift the affair, and tomorrow we shall enter into the merits of the whole matter.

All was quiet when our paper went to press.

We understand that from thirty-five to fifty friskmen are lodged in jail, many of whom are badly wounded.—Boston Herald, June 12th.

Dermody, the Poet.—Dermody's history is one of the most melancholy in the whole range of literary biography. He was rather in advance of Moore, and he possessed as much respect for the dignity of the poetical character, he might have, perhaps successfully, contested with his contemporary the honor of being regarded as the bard of his country. But Dermody, suddenly noticed by the great, and raised from poverty to high and flattering associations, was unable to keep his dazzling position. Nature had made him a poet, but circumstances degraded him into a profligrate of the lowest grade. His life was filled to overflowing with miseries of his own creation. As the story runs, his abilities were discovered by an accident. One day a gentleman, whose name has escaped us, was turning over the leaves of an old volume at a bookstand in the vicinity of the Four Courts in Dublia, when his attention was attracted by a squalid boy in the ragged dress of a peasant, standing close beside him, devouring in silent abstraction the contents of a mutilated Greek Homer. The circumstance naturally excited curiosity, and produced inquiries which led to the discovery that, with the powerful impetus of genius struggling against obstacles, the wretched looking boy had abandoned his native willage, destitute of friends and means, to seek books and mankind in the metropolis. Fortunately, the gentleman was a patron of letters, and a man of influence: he undertook to advance the fortunes of the stranget, and through his means Dermody, whom the reader will have recognized in the ragged urchia, was fluence: he undertook to advance the fortunes of the stranger, and through his means Dermody, whom the reader will have recognised in the ragged urchin, was introduced to the Countess of Moira, who continued to patronise him until he exhausted her patience by his irreclaimable vices. At first, his professions of gratified were boundless, and his numerous odes of develon te the countess, which appeared in the Anthologia, attested the enthusiasm of his feelings. But kindness was lavished upon him in vain. He wasted the gifts of his benefactors in the haunts of depravity. On one day caressed by the virtuous and the noble, he was to be found on the next in the dens of the licentions and outcast. Many attempts were made to redeem him, but without success. At length he en-listed in a marching regiment, when his friends again interfered, and purchased him a commission: the re-strainsts of a military life, however, did not suit him: he sold out came to London, and published a volume of poems, but the fate of Chatterton awaited him. ssed by the extremity of want, he subsisted Pressed by the extremity of want, he subsisted for some time upon the bounty of the charitable; but their interest in him was soon wearied out. Homeless and in despair, with a volume of Hudibras in his pocket, he wandered into the village of Lewisham, where he took up his abode at a poor ale house. As long as his host permitted him, he lived there; but the sympathy of the landlord did not last long, and and rear Dermady was driven forth to die upon the the sympathy of the landlord did not last long, and and poor Dermody was driven forth to die spon the highway. His spirit, unbroken by these accumulated misfortunes, still sustained him, and in a mood of morbid resignation, he possessed himself of an unclaimed and untenanted ruin on Hounslow-heath, that afforded him one room dilapidated and roofless. Some passing stranger discovered him in this for-lorn situation, and communicated the fact to Sir J. B. Brugges, who was then, we believe, the president of the Literary Fund Society. That gentleman imme-diately unsteamed to his relief, and when he entered diately unsteamed to his relief, and when he entered the wretched apartment he found Dermody scated on a stone which he had dragged into a corner for shelter, with his book in his hand, and ghastly famine in his eyes. To the first question that was put to him, he replied, holding up Hudibras, "See, sir, I am merry to the last!" He was speedily removed to a comfortable inn; but it was too late, his frame was wasted by long suffering, and death was close at hand. He expired in a few hours, and his remains were conveyed to the village church, where a marble slab, inscribed with a few of his own verses, points out the spot where he sleeps.

DREADFUL CALAMITY.—Thursday, an extraordinary and distressing accident occurred at Lochrin Distillery, Edinburgh, by the giving way of a building which was of great extent, and supposed to be very safely and substantially erected. The premises were five floors high, and contained a large quantity of five floors high, and contained a large quantity of grain, namely, from three to four thousand quarters of parley and malt. About one o'clock in the afternoon, the workmen in the distillery and the inhabitants around, were alarmed by a report like thunder—but nothing could be seen for some time but thick clouds of dust. As soon as the persons about the establishment recovered from their alarm and confusion, it was discovered that there were four men in the building when it gave way—two on the ground sion, it was discovered that there were four men in the building when it gave way—two on the ground floor, and two on the first floor, and that they were buried in the ruins. About twenty others had only a short time before the accident, left that to go to another part of the premises. About a hundred men were immediately set at work to remove the grain and rubbish, which lay in a confused mass upon the unfortunate sufferers, and one of the bodies was soon discovered, quite dead. It appeared that he had been almost immediately suffocated, and two of the others were subsequently found, but one is still missing. Their names are Adam Garvie, John Balmain, Marcus Meiklejohn, and John Cooper. The building, which in a moment thus became a heap of ruins, had all the appearance of being a most substantial erection, and, like the other granaries on the premises, had a number of iron beams carried through the walls and strongly boiled on the outside; yet, with all this apparent security, and without the slightest indication, it suddenly yielded to the superincumbent weight, and fell to the ground, carrying with it devastation and death. Several small houses near it were crushed to atoms, and many persons had almost miraculous escapes, but no persons besides the four men mentioned lost their lives. The top of the wall in falling broke in the roof of the building, containing several large copper boilers and knocked in one of the largest of them, capable of containing 70,000 or 80,000 gallons. One man saved himself by taking refuge under a furnace fire, though in imminent danger of being scalded to death by the water which escaped from the fractured copper.—Caledonian Mercury.

PASSAGE TO AND FROM THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT-BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Weekly conveyance by the Robinsons Line. The proprietors respectfully inform their many and very numerous friends that the undermentioned spring stalps, viz.—

JANE WALKER, KUTUZOFF, MARGARET, CONGRESS, SYLLERIE, MATTAKEESET, SLOCUM, have been engaged to supply the berth, in order to ensure and guarantee additional facilities, comforts, and despatch. Drafts as usual on the Bank of Ireland and the Robinson & Co. Dublin, on the National Bank, and all its branches, of which Daniell O'Connell, Esq. is the Governor. The rates of passage have been for some time past very considerably reduced, and the company tender a free passage to all wherever the steamboosts run to; the proprietors deem it worthy of nothing, that for the last year, 1836, they sailed from the port of Liverpool slone, sixty vessels of the largest class, being on an average of one ship for every six days, a great accommodation, as it prevents detention and delay, so very seriously complained of by passengers who engage with establishments baving only occasional opportunities. THE ROBINSONS LINE, with remittances, moneys, orders, checks, and bank post notes, sailing on the list, sth, li6th, and 28th of every month.

The proprietor of the Robinson Line very kindly return thanks to their many and widely extended friends, for the efficient and able support they have received for so many years past—and at the same time feel gratified in having it in their power to announce that they have, in consequence of many heavy shipments of specie, deposited to their credit in the banks of Ireland and England, have been enables to extend and augment very materially their arrangements with the most opulent and wealthy bankers, for the payment of their deafts on presentation.

As regards the agents for the attention of the Robinsons passengers, through Ireland, they at least possess honesty, probity and integrity; have been selected as responsible, wise, and intelligent business men, who will carrefully attend to the collection of debts or other business where efficient powers of attorney have been remitted. Passengers studying their convenience, should prefer this line. In doing so, they will avoid making contracts with people havingns agencies either in receipt of money, has and will be to gain a per centage on the amount of passage, reckless of all other consequences.

Application for remittances and passages should be directed 334 Pearl street.
